The General Services Administration (GSA) launched its Systems Furniture Test (SFT) Program in 1978 to demonstrate that modular-type furniture saved space and was cost effective. The objectives of the GSA systems furniture program would be carried out through: (1) placing systems furniture in Government space; (2) maximizing the chances of successful installations; (3) minimizing problems by use of specific reviews, strict qualifications, and tight process controls; and (4) demonstrating space savings and cost effectiveness over the life of each project. Except for placing systems furniture in Government space, the GSA program has been a failure. Its management of the program has also been poor. GSA embarked on a major expansion of the program during the second year without establishing a ceiling on the number of projects or evaluating the costs incurred under the test program. Also, this expansion was undertaken before GSA received even preliminary data from a consultant employed to evaluate the program. Further, GSA did not consider any alternatives to systems furniture or require agencies to provide sufficient data to make cost-benefit analyses. In addition to these problems, the...
