Brand New Book  Print on Demand .The first lecture, is given under the title, The Channels of Life. After a brief introduction in which the lecturer made further reference to his former connection with the University of Virginia and the renewal of his service in the initiation of the Barbour-Page courses, which mark the beginning of more intimate relations between the University and her sister institutions, he said that his object was not to make a plea for the study of Greek. Living is the test of vitality, and all the pleading in the world will be vain if life is lost. The problem is not whether Greek is worthwhile; but, Greek being given, how to teach Greek, how to learn Greek so as to make it a part or recognize it as part of the moral and intellectual life of the times. In the second lecture, Greek Language and Literature, illustrates of the theme as laid down in the first were drawn from the Greek language and the Greek literature. The laudation of the Greek language must be reserved for the intimate circle of those who know Greek. The attraction of a language as of a person lies in the physical charm, and the physical charm exists in the eye of the lover. So the present discourse turns on what might be called the social relations of the Greek language-its pervasiveness. The fact that the classical languages belong to the same stock as our own does not enter into our consciousness. Our monosyllabic language reduces so much to the state of radicals that the provenience of a word makes little difference. The study of origins, of etymologies, has very little to do with...
